N°. 281.

PARMA, April 30.

LAST week an accident happened here, which threw the inhabitants of this city, and places adjacent, into the greateſt conſternation and confuſion imaginable: A ſudden and dreadful noiſe, which ſhook all the houſes, and damaged many, made the people think that an earthquake had happened, and that the noiſe proceeded from the buildings tumbling down; but it was only the powder-mill that blew up, the ſtones and beams of which being violently ſcattered by the exploſion, damaged many adjacent houſes. The inhabitants, in their fright, poſted away in crowds to the gates of the city, trampling and ſtifling one another for haſte to get out into the fields; but being ſoon made ſenſible of the real cauſe of this dreadful exploſion, they returned quietly to their habitations. Upon enquiry into the cauſe of this accident, it appears that it was owing to the careleſſneſs of the men employed in the powder-mill, who, in leaving off work, forgot to put out ſome fire in the laboratory. We hear of no more than one perſon killed on this occaſion, by a wall tumbling down upon him.

An extract of a letter from Amſterdam, May 12.

The following remarks have been made by ſome very ſenſible perſons, upon the four treaties of peace concluded ſince the death of the emperor Charles the VIth, at Breſlau, Dreſden, Fueſſen, and this of Aix-la-Chapelle. The firſt, they ſay, was concluded becauſe the conqueror was fearful of a reverſe of fortune; and if, indeed, after the battle of Czaſlaw, he ſhould have happened to have loſt one, there would have been an end of his conqueſts, he could not have been relieved; he therefore thought it better to make a bridge of gold for his enemy to go over, and content himſelf with a part of Sileſia. The ſecond came about in the following manner: After the victory near Dreiden, the conqueror had it in his power to lay all Saxony, Thuringia, and Miſnia, under contribution, and ſubject thoſe countries to be plundered; but then he apprehended that the whole empire would have joined in oppoſing the ruin of ſo powerful an elector, who would probably too have been aſſiſted by Poland and Ruſſia; he therefore prudently reſtored his conqueſts, contenting himſelf with having ſpread the terror of his name. The defeat of Pfaffenhoven was the occaſion of the third, and came apropos to juſtify the treaty which the elector of Bavaria had been negotiating ſome weeks with the miniſters of the court of Vienna, being obliged, by the French leaving him, to abandon them, in his turn, to prevent his undergoing the fate of his grand father after the battle of Hochſtet. The laſt and moſt recent, it is now well known, was concluded, becauſe the finances of France were exhauſted, that kingdom threatened with famine, its marine and commerce ruined, and the arrival of the Ruſſians threatening to determine a great part of Germany to declare in favour of the allies; which the court of Berlin would have liked no better than that of Verſailles. Theſe circumſtances put his moſt Chriſtian majeſty under a neceſſity of concluding a peace, contenting himſelf ſolely with the reputation he had aſſumed of having given peace to his enemies; which nobody thought fit to contradict.

Dublin, June 9. Orders are given by the pariſhes to take away all children of beggars, and to put them into the proteſtant charter ſchool; which will be of the utmoſt advantage to this kingdom, as it will create induſtry, prevent idleneſs, beggary, thieving, robbery and murder; and hinder theſe ſtrolling wretches from being a burthen to the public.——We hear alſo, that the bill to prevent the clandeſtine marriages of infants, or perſons under the age of twenty one, will be amended, by making all marriages null and void, of perſons of property in Ireland, who ſhall be married out of the kingdom, without the conſent of parents or guardians.

Florence, April 18. All our mountains are covered with ſnow, and the uncommon cold felt at this ſeaſon, fills us with fears, for the harveſt. The hoſpital of S. Maria Nova is ſo crouded with poor and ſick, that they talk of removing a part of them to ſome convents. Our diſtreſs increaſes more and more; and the cries of the poor for work and bread fill our ears night and day. The courts of Spain and France ſeem to think ſeriouſly of getting a king of Lombardy crown'd, and will leave nothing unattempted to effect it this ſummer.

From the London Daily Gazetteer, May 7.

THE bright ſide of human nature never appears more diſtinguiſh'd than when acting for the common good, unbounded by partiality or ſelf-intereſted views, and calculated to circulate univerſal happineſs: One of the principal happineſſes of life, is a fair and ample ſubſiſtence, acquir'd by induſtry and improv'd by frugality: This, with contentment, or not too great an anxiety for wealth, brings us on the way to the ſummit of earthly bliſs: Virtue is included in it; and every moral ſentiment contributes to this great end, to make us pleas'd with ourſelves, and eaſy and agreeable to others. But when we look further into the nature of human affairs, and make the doing good to others, a virtue ſuperior to that of ſelf-happineſs, ſimply conſidered, we become oftentimes capable of conferring more benefits on our fellow-creatures, than at our firſt ſetting out, we apprehended we had abilities ſuited to.

This is the caſe of all ſuch ſchemes, inventions, or projects, which are calculated for the public good, and ſucceed happily; the reſult of them are too complex or many, for even the ſchemiſt's own comprehenſions; the multiplying benefits are involv'd in the womb of futurity, from whence, gradually ſpringing, they appear, at laſt, in their full force and ſplendour.

Some years ſince, an ingenious clergyman was preſented to the living of Bantry in Ireland, which, like ſome of our poor livings in England, was but ill conſider'd for the maintenance of the incumbent: He was not only poor himſelf, but had the chance likewiſe to be ſurrounded with poor neighbours, whom he conſidered in their miſerable ſtate, with infinitely more concern than his own; tho' perhaps, at the ſame time, apprehenſive enough, that could he improve their condition, his own would be mended of courſe. I need not inform my reader, that Bantry is a village ſeated on the margin of a fine bay, where fiſh, before this clergyman's arrival, wanton'd in great plenty and profuſion; but either through want of ſkill, proper materials, or indolence, there was no kind of benefit made of the great ſtore, providence ſeem'd to have gather'd together there, for the emolument of the inhabitants. The clergyman was long revolving in his mind, how to bring about a deſign he had been concerting, to turn this great ſtorehouſe of food to ſome real uſe: That is to ſay, to procure a proper veſſel and fiſhing tackle, to make his poor neighbours active and induſtrious, and to find a proper market that would encourage the labourers. Totally a ſtranger to all theſe things, otherwiſe than being bleſs'd with a good underſtanding, and a happy conception of the uſe of ſuch rude materials as caſually preſented to his view, he reſolved at laſt to attempt ſomething. Chance threw a little boat aſhore; and being juſt rich enough to purchaſe a few fiſhing tackle and a ſmall net, he after much perſuaſion, engaged ſome of the poor people to adventure out with him; and having all the ſucceſs he could wiſh, in a few hours they return'd home with light hearts and a loaded boat. This enabled him to add ſalt to his ſtore, and by degrees, ſuch a number of boats and neceſſary materials, as rais'd him from the degree of a poor parſon, to that of an eminent merchant. Gain produced an emulation among the people, who ſhould be moſt induſtrious. The clergyman divided the profits fairly, and ſettled a correſpondence with the merchants at Cork, who took off all the fiſh as faſt as they could cure and barrel them. By this means, the poor village of Bantry grew gradually into a handſome town, filled with artificers and tradeſmen. When the clergyman had brought his deſigns to this happy period, he left the future conduct to his ſon, and betook himſelf to the more peculiar care of his flock; and at length having ſucceeded far beyond his hopes, baniſh'd ignorance, indolence and poverty, and conſtituted in their ſtead, religion, induſtry and wealth, he left this world for a better; and his ſon one of the moſt eminent merchants in Ireland.------I have only to add, that this ſtory gave the firſt hint of that glorious project now on foot, for eſtabliſhing the WHITE HERRING FISHERY.

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 13.

Extract of a Letter from Halifax, dated July 22, 1750.

" Your favour of the 7th of May, found me at Minas, which is about one hundred miles up in the country, where I have been ſince the 6th of April, and am return'd but yeſterday: We went from hence with about 400 men, in order to take poſſeſſion of the Iſthmus, which is between the Bay Verte, and Bay Fundy; but when we came there, behold we found all the Indians of the river St. John's, all the Mickmack tribes of Indians, in number about 700, with the ſame number of diſaffected French inhabitants, and about 200 regular troops, ready to receive us, making in all about 1600 fighting men, and their ſituation ſo good, that if we had had an equal number to theirs, we ſhould have found it a difficult matter to have diſlodged them; therefore we thought it moſt prudent to defer the attempt of taking poſſeſſion, until a more favourable opportunity, (which I hope will not be long e'er it happens.) If we get poſſeſſion of this neck of land, with a good fort on it, it will be out of the power of all the Indians in America to diſturb us; tho' we do not get it this ſummer, yet we ſhall the next.

About 15 days ago I had a hard bruſh with a body of the rebel French, and about 50 Indians, on the Cobiquid ſide of the bay of Minas: I endeavour'd to ſurprize them in the night, but the black-arſes kept too good a guard, and I was diſappointed in this attempt; however I attacked them about half an hour after day-break, with one hundred men with me; and tho' they were very well poſted in a thick wood, yet after our ſecond fire they quitted it, and fled to the village de Bourke which was juſt near them, thinking to keep poſſeſſion of it; but we ruſhed on them and beat them from thence, ſetting up the Indian howl after them all the time we chaſed; a great many of them may thank their heels for their lives; we killed three of them, and I believe wounded many; and we had but one man killed, and none wounded.------We have built a very fine fort in the heart of the country, (tho' we were threatened to be devour'd before we could get it half finiſh'd) which commands the river St. Croix and Diziquid, and overlooks ſeven villages: The land about the fort, and where the villages are, is extremely rich; all the inhabited lands in the back parts of this country is extremely fertile, and ſituated near five navigable rivers, in which rivers the tide riſes at full Moon about fifty or ſixty foot.

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 9.

By late advices from England, we are aſſured, that on the 15th of May laſt, after a hearing of ſix days, in the cauſe depending in the high court of chancery, between the honourable the proprietaries of the province of Pennſylvania complainants, and the right honourable the lord Baltimore, proprietor of the province of Maryland, defendant; wherein the complainants demanded the ſpecific performance of an agreement executed in the year 1732, for running two lines as boundaries of Pennſylvania and the three lower counties; the lord chancellor, after declaring that he had not taken time to conſider the matter from any doubt on which ſide the equity of the cauſe lay, but as it was an affair of great extent and conſequence, to view it in all its parts, decreed, That the agreement ſubſiſted, and was obligatory on the parties; That they ſhould within three months ſign commiſſions to ſeven perſons, who, or any three of them, ſhould have authority to run the lines according to the agreement; and particularly directed in the decree, That effectually to inforce the execution of the decree, and avoid unfair proceedings, the cauſe ſhould be left open, for the more eaſy application of either party, as in the cauſe for redreſs; and that the defendant ſhould pay the plaintiffs charges, occaſioned by the defendant's commiſſioners endeavouring to violate the agreement, the expences of executing the commiſſion to examine witneſſes in America, and all other coſts in the ſuit.

ANNAPOLIS,

Since our laſt, we have collected ſome further Account of the Spaniſh Fleet, which met with bad Weather at Sea, and were, ſome of them, forced into Norfolk. We are aſſured that the whole Fleet, which left the Havanna, conſiſted of three Galleons, four Regiſter Ships, one Brigantine, and one Sloop, under Convoy of one Spaniſh Man of War of 50 Guns: They were parted at Sea by bad Weather. One of the Galleons, a Regiſter Ship, and the Sloop, are at Norfolk, and have brought in a vaſt Sum of Money; the Galleon had 350 Cheſts of Dollars on board, and a great Quantity of Cochineal, Sugar, Indigo, Cocoa, and Dying-Wood: One Paſſenger on board her had 200,000 Dollars, and a great Quantity of Diamonds. They loſt all their Maſts, and flung over all their Guns, which were 40, at Sea; and when ſhe came into Norfolk, had fourteen Feet Water in her Hold. The other Ship belongs to the Portugueze, her Cargo conſiſting of Cocoa, Cochineal and Money; having 600,000 Dollars regiſter'd, and a great Quantity beſides. The Brigantine, as we mentioned before, was loſt; but all, or the greateſt Part of her Money ſaved. The Man of War, called (in Engliſh) the Greyhound, commanded by Capt. Onneſs, an Iriſh Gentleman, after loſing all her Maſts, Rudder, and Guns, at Sea, drove aſhore on Matchapunt Shoals, off Worceſter County, in this Province, with 7 Feet Water in her Hold; where ſhe now lies a Wreck. After ſhe ſtruck, the People hoiſted out her Boats, but they ſtove along ſide, being about a quarter of a Mile from the Shore; after which they made a Raft, on which they brought a good deal of Money aſhore; but two Men, and two Cheſts of Money, were waſh'd off and loſt; and two other Men, attempting to ſwim aſhore, had tied ſo much Money round their Waiſts, that they ſunk with it, and were drowned. The Captain hired two Sloops to carry his Men, and what Money they could ſave, round to Eliſabeth in Virginia. She had on board, beſides Money, Spaniſh Snuff, Spaniſh Tobacco, and a great Quantity of Mohogany, the beſt which could be got, for the King of Spain's new Palace at Madrid. The People at and about Worceſter County, are every Day, in good Weather, fiſhing what they can out of her, and have found a conſiderable Booty.

By the Man of War's being loſt, about 20 Engliſhmen, who had been made Priſoners by the Spaniards, and were on board her, have got their Liberty. One of the Men belonged to Capt. Walter Wrench, in a fine Ship from Virginia; who, we hear, was ſeized at the Havanna, where Capt. Wrench now remains a Priſoner.

What is become of the reſt of the Spaniſh Fleet, we have not as yet heard.

Cuſtom-Houſe, ANNAPOLIS, Entered, NONE.

Cleared for Departure,

Sloop Bohemia, John Robinſon, for Antigua.
